

Clear Channel encourages and rewards it's on-air personalities who make on-air comments that encourage the general public to harm cyclists. The actions they encourage, which include throwing things such as glass bottles at cyclings, and running them over, could kill the cyclist. This is irresponsible at best, and since it puts the general public at risk, is dangerous to the society at large. Clear Channel should not receive a renewal of their license because they condone activity that is harmful to the general public.